The number of weddings has already been unusually large for so early in the season, and as a great many more are to take place during the next few weeks the feminine mind is much puzzled over the subject of presents. Of course the usual bowls and pitchers, forks and spoons may be ordered from any fashionable jeweler without much trouble in the choice. But when you know the bride will receive much silver, and you wish your present to be something out of the common it becomes quite a different affair, and all your taste and ingenuity is taxed to the extreme, says a New York letter. A very handsome present that is also exceedingly rare, is bric-a-brac of Limoges ware. A pitcher of the material that is exhibited in a slender, graceful shape, and about ten inches in height, finely enameled, with four historical scenes on the bowl; and though the figures are very minute, each can be artistically analyzed, and yet not a single flaw is to be discovered. This is fifty dollars, but larger ones can be ordered costing several hundred, depending entirely on the amount of work required. A bookbinder of this ware is for sale for ten dollars, while tiny chairs and sofas of the Louis Quatorze style, which are so fashionable as ornaments, are seen as low as twenty or thirty. Ordinary machine-made copper enamel or Limoges ware, though expensive, is not at all uncommon, but this is quite different from the art objects that have just been described. These are executed by hand and form quite a study. The art of enameling porcelain on copper is extremely old, and was supposed to have been lost, when a collector of antique varieties happened to see one of these vases exposed for sale at the window of a Vienna merchant. His price convinced him that it could not have been one of the original vases, of which only a few are now in existence, and yet on careful examination he found the article to be no imitation, but a genuine piece of superb workmanship. He immediately purchased the vase, but the wily merchant would not tell how or where he became possessed of the treasure, though he offered to take orders for such articles as the antiquary might wish, but this did not satisfy his spirit of investigation, and he resolved that he would himself search out the artist. At last his perseverance was rewarded, and he discovered an old man living at Limoges who is the sole master of this ancient art. Day after day, year in and year out, he toils to win his daily bread, and increase the bric-a-brac collections that adorn the house of some wealthy child of fashion. There he works on, concealing his secret with jealous care, so that when he dies, unless he chooses to bequeath it as a valuable legacy, his funeral dirge will be the last requiem of this then truly lost art. Russian ware is also quite new in this country, none of it having been offered for sale before this autumn, but though nearly as expensive as the Limoges, being enameled on silver instead of copper, it will never become as rare, for the work is to a considerable extent done by machine, and a great deal of it is manufactured yearly in Russia. At almost every wedding are seen clocks and ornaments of Roushet and Dresden ware, but of course they are always old, having been used for at least half a century. Odd pieces of furniture will be even more given this year than last, and sets of books bound in white velvet, trimmed with gold or silver make a very pretty present. Miss Drexel, the Philadelphia heiress, who was married at the cathedral in New York, last summer, carried instead of flowers a white velvet prayer-book the gift of the groom's mother. It had clasps and settings of silver, and on the center of the cover were the initials of the bride wrought in diamonds.

For those who prefer jewelry, the newest designs in bracelets, pins, etc., are pea blossoms. A spray of four or five of these, with the stems clustered together and a brilliant diamond or pearl in the center of each, forms an exceedingly handsome lace pin. These pea blossoms will be much used, not only in jewelry, but also in fancy work. A dainty bonbonniere seen at a fashionable New York confectioner's was a little square basket with a bunch of velvet pea leaves and blossoms, having the tint and perfume of the natural flower and fastened on the cover by a pale green bow falling in graceful folds around the leaves.

Two Little Heiresses.

There were two little girls at Newport last summer who attracted more than the ordinary interest attached to children of wealthy people. These two maidens were Gertrude and Consuelo Vanderbilt, and in a few years they will be the richest heiresses in society. They are not sisters, but cousins, and as entirely dissimilar in appearance and character as though no drop of the same blood flowed in their veins. But they are close companions, and apparently fond of one another, and when one drives out in her dog-cart the other is sure to appear also. Gertrude is the oldest daughter of Cornelius Vanderbilt. She is about 13 years old, and the fairies have given her the fair beauty of the "Snowy Princess" as well as her pot of gold. Her resemblance to little Elsie, the heiress of the "Fountain" fame is often commented upon. She has the same long curls, deep blue eyes and oval face and pearly complexion. She is tall for her age, and has such a pretty, willowy little figure, dainty hands and slender, arched feet. Her nature is sweet and sunny. Naturally shy with strangers, she is full of merriment with those she knows. Little Consuelo is about the same age and is the oldest of W. K. Vanderbilt's children. She is named for Lady Mandeville and is an odd little creature, with a thin, graceful little figure and a dark Mignon face, lit by two serious gray eyes as deep as wells and as bright as stars. Her hair is like a tangle of dark shadows about her head, and her little mouth, which often has such mischievous curves, is as sweet as a pomegranate. She has been twice around the world in the Alva and in many strange countries, and the little sprite can talk in Japanese and Italian as well as in German and French. In fact, she is highly educated as though she was a princess royal, plays classical music, and sketches, rides, and knows more about the stars and the waves than many a college graduate. Some day each of these children will probably have a fortune of at least $10,000,000, and when they make their debut into society they will eclipse all other heiresses of the time. Both girls are always simply dressed, pretty gingham dresses with white embroidery, russet shoes and big bow-tied waists. In the morning, and soft white muslin and muslin with broad sashes, white hats and fine black stockings and patent leather ties for the afternoon. They are never seen at night, but tucked away in their little beds, sleeping the beauty sleep that will grow them into beautiful young women. They spend their days playing tennis, horseback riding, driving their parties to little lakes, wood dog carts, and go to dancing and swimming school. Each girl has a governess, who devotes her entire time to her pupils, and if they do not grow into beautiful, cultivated women, it will not be from lack of attention.

The Latest Popular Dance.

Among the newer dances, says the Nebraska State Journal, none has struck the popular fancy as the "berlin." It is bright and vivacious, easy in tempo and movement, and simple in execution. It is unique in character, having more varied forms or changes in its promenade, reverse and waltz than any of its rivals for public favor. It was approved last winter by the older, and is now the special favorite of the younger dancers in the ballroom, while during the summer season just closed it was the pride of the lawn party. The "berlin" is, strictly speaking, a polka step, displaying an easy toe movement. The dancers start side by side, the gentleman holding the lady's left hand in his right, polka forward and then reversing positions, polka back and turn. Then, while in a waltz position the couple execute two glides, polka and repeat. It is a very graceful dance among society people, but when copied by many young persons who are prone to dangle through everything in the dance order, it becomes a sort of impromptu ballet for the onlooker. At most of the summer resorts the berlin was the choice of dances during the past season, while at Long Branch, Saratoga, Lake Mohawke and other resorting places for the rich in the east, it became as much of a craze as the society waltz did a few years ago. At the garden parties at the Great Union hotel at Saratoga the berlin took the place of the german. But this was because the berlin was more adapted for the lawn than its formidable rival for public favor. The german will continue the coming winter, as it has been for several seasons past, the leading dance, because the American society professors of dancing claim it is more adapted to society.

The Current Fashions.

The novelty in the fashion of dress skirts this season is the absence of the steel and tulle. Underskirts are narrow; they are finished at the foot by a band of the material of the dress about six inches deep, with a fluting or kiting one and a half inch deep. If the foundation skirt is of the same color as the dress the band may be omitted, and the fluting be made of the material of the underskirt. Thus, for instance, if the foundation skirt is made of brown silk, and the upper skirt of brown woolen material to match, it will suffice to edge the former with a fluting of the brown silk. But if you make a dress of gray woolen material over a foundation skirt of black silk, it will be necessary to put a border and fluting of the gray material around the foot of the foundation skirt. This done, the over-skirt, or in fact the plain upper skirt, which should reach down to the lower edge of the fluting, is put on with two rows of gathers around the top of the foundation skirt. Sometimes a flounce about six inches deep is put on under the upper skirt in order to allow of the latter being slightly draped.

A pretty reception dress made in this style of soft woolen material of a light brown shade, the front of which is embroidered in wool, with a pattern of rushes and foliage in various shades of brown and green. A spray of the same comes up over the middle of the bodice, which is a plain cuirass, buttoned under the left arm and over the right shoulder. Tight sleeves, with puffs over the shoulders. The skirt forms two long, round plaits at the back. Black appears in combination with all colors, and the black trimmings of this year are of great beauty. This was especially evidenced in the magnificent empire pointed gown introduced onto the skirt and bodice of a gray Amazon cloth, made up with a gray and black striped silk, which formed the long coat. This opened down the back and front to display the cloth, which in front was exquisitely concealed by the black galon. The bodice had a band of this carried straight across the back, forming a yoke, from which fell a fringe of drops. The sleeves were half cloth and half silk, the union concealed with the galon, and throughout showed the same graceful trimming.

Long gowns would seem to be coming in again, and one admirable model was a rich geranium brocade on black. The back had a perfectly new arrangement; a broad strip of black velvet, piped and lined with satin, the lower portion folded under, forming a loop of the material, if it may be thus described. The magnificent brocade bordered each side and opened over a front covered with embroidery. The bodice displayed a part of a zone of black lace, net, by a velvet-point piece on one side only.

A walking costume, made tailor fashion, was very simple. A foundation skirt of black silk, trimmed with a border and fluting of slate-gray boars' hair round the foot. The skirt of the same put on with two rows of gathers. This had a hem twelve inches deep, lined with wide satin. This hem is ornamented with seventeen rows of silk stitching. Tight-fitting bodice, with a plain plastron fastened on the left side, and trimmed on each side with a row of large buttons. It is slightly pointed in front, and forms a small artist's blouse at the back. Tight sleeves, puffed high on the shoulders. This costume was worn with a gray felt hat trimmed with ribbons.

Bathing in Milk.

The author of "Extremes a la Mode" gives a pleasing description of the personal appearance of Ninon l'Enclosure, who "was celebrated for the love she inspired at an age when others retain scarcely a recollection of their former conquests. She studiously avoided painted and other compositions with which the ladies of the day unmercifully bedazzled their faces." Next to water pure milk is recommended. Bathing in pure milk before it had lost its animal heat was looked upon by the ancients as an infallible remedy for, or preventive of, freckles, blotches or rashes. Asses' milk was preferred for this purpose, and it is said that Poppa kept 500 asses for the sole purpose of supplying her bath. When she ceased to be a leading matron in Rome she reduced her remarkable dairy somewhat, but even in her exile and comparative poverty she retained fifty milk producers and considered herself poorly supplied. She invented a comestible consisting of wheat flour, honey and asses' milk boiled together, and called it Poppa-milk.

There are times when too much water, especially of a soapy nature, is to be avoided. The most notable of these is when there is a dry, hot and tender feeling, with too much redness. This condition is often the result of exposure to the heat or cold or of indigestion. A suitable unguent application protects and soothes the tender surface and restores the skin to a healthy condition. Cold cream is the best, and that scented with rose water is decidedly preferable to the glycerine dilution. The latter is handy for use on a long journey, as it keeps well and is not much affected by heat. Owing, however, to the glycerine it contains it is apt to draw out too much moisture and leave the skin unpleasantly dry. On no account should unguent be applied to the face; vaseline when well prepared is much better, but the cheaper forms of it have few virtues, and often cause considerable pain. Pure olive or almond oil is decidedly preferable in every way.

When They Promise.

To most men, a woman engaged with a needle has a domestic, home-like air that is almost irresistible. How can a man propose to a girl who sits straight up in her chair, staring hard at him with a pair of bright eyes? But when she is bending gracefully over a bit of plain or fancy sewing, apparently absorbed in counting the stitches, and the arrows of her eyes are shuttled for a few minutes, he plucks up courage enough to offer her his heart and hand. The aver young man is beautiful in such affairs, though bold enough at other times, and needs encouragement and opportunities. What sort of encouragement is a pair of bright eyes staring into his, watching his embarrassment?
